Official Institutions Digest Q3 2020: The Great Rebound

FOR PROFESSIONAL CLIENTS / QUALIFIED INVESTORS / QUALIFIED CLIENTS ONLY

BlackRock.

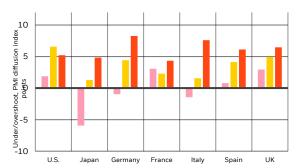

Happening in markets

Faster than expected activity restart coupled with lingering virus risks and election uncertainty has resulted in a third-quarter generally positive for risk assets, but with elevated volatility. Safe havens were broadly unchanged, while oil continued to struggle, albeit off its Q1 lows. Fund flows into equities were slightly negative in Q3 with only APAC registering net positive flows.

By contrast fixed income flows were positive across the Asset performance year to date and since our midyear outlook, board, particularly in the investment grade space, with September 2020 only U.S. government bonds registering outflows. For the first time this year, ETP flows into the value factor have turned positive for two consecutive months, driven by the U.S.

We are not out of the coronavirus-woods yet. The world $_{\rm EM\, ex-Asia\, equities}^{\rm Global\, high\, yield}$ has passed the grim one million deaths mark, and Europe experiencing a second wave; however a lower fatality rate, continued highly supportive policy and positive momentum in the quest for a vaccine helps explain the relatively muted market response to a renewed rise in infections.

Manufacturing PMI surprise, June-Aug 2020

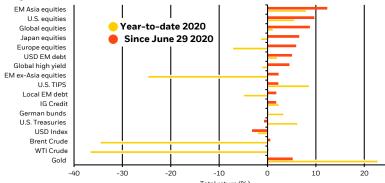

Source: BlackRock Investment Institute, with data from Haver Analytics, September 2020. Notes: Charts show the gap between actual and predicted PMIs for the past three months of data, with predictions derived from a model mapping PMI activity onto measures of mobility. A positive (negative) number implies that the data are stronger (weaker) than would be expected, based on the estimated relationship between activity and mobility.

Coming up next

- The U.S. elections are the key macro risk to markets between now and year end, with the potential for lingering uncertainty and polaropposite outcomes, notably on the fiscal and structural fronts, depending on who wins the White House and Senate.
- Each potential outcome presents unique risks to macro sentiment, directional asset class implications and significant rotations within asset classes. Our September 28th and October 5th weekly commentaries takes a look at these
- See the September update to our Global Outlook for more on what we think is coming next.

Meanwhile in the real economy...

- Manufacturing survey data surprised showing a fairly rapid and faster than expected recovery; the vigorous rebound of employment and trade could suggest more upward momentum is to follow in other sectors.
- Inflation has surprised on the upside in a number of countries. and we expect it could be substantially higher than markets are pricing in over the medium term, reflecting shifting Central Bank priorities, and a host of structural factors.

U.S. inflation market pricing vs. BLK inflation estimate, 2015 -

with data from Refinitiv Datastream., September 2020. Notes: The chart shows market pricing of expected average inflation over the five-year period starting in 2025. We show it using the five-year/five-year inflation swap which is a measure of market expectation of inflation over five years, starting in five years' time. In the chart, the line is shifted forward five years. The orange dot shows our current estimate of average U.S. CPI for the same five-year period of 2025-2030.

Strategic Asset Allocation Corner

The impact from COVID-19 will change the course of society, the economy, and financial markets for years to come. We see three key themes as essential to consider in the new investment landscape.

New norms of economic activity

Super charged structural trends

Real resilience for the whole portfolio

Lower for-ever?

Historical policy response to COVID-19 and subsequent political pressure to keep rates low tells us not to hold our breath waiting for a reprise of fixed income yields – which calls into question the ability of bonds to provide ballast. Additionally, high quality spreads are tightening back toward pre-COVID* levels, making finding quality yield a challenge.

Tectonic shift to sustainable investing

The COVID shock has supercharged the sustainability wave, and investors are taking notice of asset vulnerabilities to physical and regulatory climate & sustainability related risks.

Building resilience

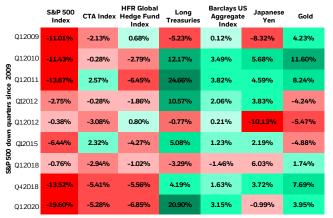

Many traditional diversifiers have not diversified; the table below demonstrates historical correlation of various asset classes to S&P 500 returns. We believe both near and longer-term risks require heightened attention to resiliency and diversification in portfolios.

Our Capital Market Assumptions' OI model portfolio suggests allocations to China and Alternative Assets as non-traditional diversifiers. Why?

In China, the majority of global fixed income yielding >2.5% is in China, and the Chinese market has demonstrated low correlation with returns of major developed countries.*

Alternative strategies can help diversify existing portfolio risk while enhancing return expectations. More on this in our Private Markets 2020 paper.

BlackRock Reserve Manager model portfolio

Despite pivotal shifts in the market landscape, safety and liquidity remain core principles of reserve management. But what about return? Our 2020 'Reserve Manager' model portfolios make allocations beyond traditional reserve portfolio asset classes, including equities, EM, real assets and credit, with significant consideration on sustainability measures. Our publication on Reserve management in an uncertain world takes a closer look at methodologies for constructing our 'Return Focused Reserve Manager' and 'Reserve Manager ISAA' portfolios.

As seen below, riskier compositions of the two 'model' portfolios led to an outperformance of these relative to the G7 Treasury benchmark, but during crises, underperformed as anticipated.

Simulated historical performance of reserve portfolio

	2.5% Return	Reserve Manager ISAA	G / I-IO year bonds	US
	Target Portfolio	Portfolio	(hedged)	Cash
2015	-2.1%	-1.5%	0.2%	0.2%
2016	4.5%	4.7%	0.8%	0.4%
2017	3.1%	6.6%	1.6%	1.0%
2018	0.3%	-2.5%	2.8%	1.9%
2019	4.0%	8.6%	4.1%	2.1%
2020	6.2%	3.7%	2.4%	0.5%

Official Institution Trends

Global round-up of Ols in the news

Sustainability powers on

- Despite COVID implications on the global economy and subsequent impact on Official Institutions, investors have not let their foot of the gas in the push for sustainable investing.
- A recent Inter-American Development Bank publication makes the case for a heightened awareness of ESG factors for sovereign and public pension funds seeking financial returns and social benefits.
- The world's second largest multi-lateral development bank, Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank, has unveiled its most recent project to create the Asia Climate Bond Portfolio.
- Several have pledged adherence to sustainable initiatives through public commitments; the Philippines has joined the Network of Central Banks and Supervisors for Greening the Financial System (NGFS); Banco Central do Brasil has announced their sustainability agenda, including the intention to further embed ESG considerations into policy and decision making on reserves. Additionally, Sweden's Riksbank has announced they may take sustainability into account when selecting corporate bonds, while the European Central Bank is investigating if and how monetary policy operations and portfolios could be adjusted to reflect effects and risks of climate change and associated market failures. Other OIs are supporting sustainability through investment mandates and actions, including Taiwan's Bureau of Labor Funds assigning Asia's first ESG fixed-income mandate, China's National Council for Social Security issuing their first offshore mandate in five years which incorporates responsible investment considerations, Sweden's AP7 injection into their green impact strategy, and Norway's sovereign wealth fund divesting from several companies due to human rights violation concerns.

COVID impact challenges SWF returns

- Sovereign wealth funds are continuing bear the economic brunt of the COVID impact as they are drawn on for economic support in their countries. Panama's sovereign wealth fund has been pushed to make their first withdrawal in order to support the Ministry of Finance; Abu Dhabi has drawn from Mubadala as part of their COVID response. Saudi Arabia is considering asset sale and increased income tax to alleviate COVID- and oil price-related pressures on the budget.
- Some are calling COVID the end of a 'golden era' for sovereign wealth funds, as many are swallowing sharp declines to portfolio returns; Australian Government Future Fund, Temasek and GIC have posted worst annual returns relative to recent years, Norges Bank Investment Management is experiencing high volatility in its oil fund returns, and New Zealand Superannuation Fund has taken a -1.73% loss on the year.
- Research suggests many sovereign funds may have been ill prepared for the COVID crisis, and market landscape indicates an increasingly difficult investment environment in the near- to medium-term with potential to negatively affect OI financial returns as they adapt to new norms.

Diversifying traditional diversifiers

- Official Institutions are diversifying investments by expanding geographic exposures and focusing on real asset opportunities.
- As geopolitical fragmentations decrease market correlations, and OI investors work to avoid overconcentration in their domestic markets, more are turning to foreign investments. This is supported by recent actions of Malaysia's state funds (Khazanah, Employee's Provident Fund and Kumpulan Wang Persaraan), and Korea Investment Corporation actively seeking global developed market opportunities.
- Other OIs are probing international markets for sector-specific opportunities, including Thailand's Government Pension Fund's plan to increase tech investments overseas, or region-specific exposures including Middle East investors interest in Europe, Temasek's increasing exposure to China, and broad sovereign
- In efforts to boost returns, many sovereign funds have indicated a drawdown of equity investments in favor of private markets. We see significant interest in real asset alternative investments, as SOFAZ has made commitments to U.S. real estate, KIC's interest in European and Chinese commercial properties, and Kuwait's PIFSS intention to triple infrastructure investments in 2020.
- Not everyone is convinced of real assets' value proposition, as some sovereign funds are shifting focus to private equity and scaling back real estate investments due to COVID-related uncertainty and vacancy risks.

Reserve portfolios recover further

- The momentum of positive reserve growth in Q2 has been sustained in Q3, and in some cases brings reserve portfolios to record highs. This is a welcomed reversal of trends after significant drawdowns in Q1 in the name of economic preservation and stabilization.
 - Bank of Israel attributes growth to increased FX purchases and revaluation of equity assets, with 15% of the reserve portfolio in equity markets. After falling to the lowest level since 2010, Saudi Arabia's reserves rebounded with measures including tripling the country's value-added tax. Amidst rebound stories, in general Asian central banks have less cause for concern in their FX portfolios, recording the highest levels of reserve adequacy among global central banks.
- Other notable Q3 reserve growth has included South Africa's increase in net foreign reserves; Croatia's 4.3% month-over-month reserve growth; Malaysia's reserves reaching $1.04.4bn; Indonesia reaching record highs in August.
- While some are riding the growth wave, other Central Banks' reserve portfolios have not yet been able to reverse a downward trend. FX reserve assets of the Reserve Bank of Australia have sharply fallen during COVID-19 resulting from the negative impact of security revaluations. Some emerging markets continue to struggle to stop the bleeding and are now running low on reserves after burning through them fighting virus repercussions.

Readying for Real Resilience

The impact of Covid-19 has transformed the investment landscape in a matter of a few months. It is precisely the type of event that underscores the importance of a portfolio construction approach that incorporates uncertainty in estimating asset returns instead of an over-reliance on point estimates, further discussed here.

Risk Parity is Built for Languid Times

The post-pandemic world is likely to look different, and as investors, we should reexamine our assumptions of portfolio construction in the context of this new regime. Risk parity is well-positioned for what we see as the most likely scenario: low rates, low inflation and sluggish growth.

Turning Point for Fixed Income ETFs

In the extreme financial asset volatility in the first half of 2020, the largest and most heavily traded fixed income ETFs performed a critical role and demonstrated that they are integral to efficient bond markets. Click here for more on FI ETFs during recent market stress, and how we're thinking about them in portfolio construction.

Navigating the Beta

Long held assumptions can change quickly, and investors must be positioned to respond when asset prices change. The prospect of an even more prolonged period of low interest rates is likely to challenge return generation from market betas here. Read more on the opportunity set of mutli-asset strategies.

Preparing for a Higher Inflation Regime

Inflation has persistently undershot central bank targets despite more than a decade of stimulus to revive it. Yet we see three new forces that may lead to a higher inflation regime than many investors are expecting. Click here for more on BlackRock Investment Institute's outlook on inflation.

Considering Commodities

With the path back to normality remaining unclear in many parts of the world, and the global growth outlook still uncertain, in this piece our experts seek to broadly describe what happened to commodities thus far in 2020, and what to potentially expect going forward.

Implications of EU Bond Issuance

The European Union is poised to become one of the largest single issuers in the Euro area, with issuance supporting COVID response measures. Click here for more on the credit rational of EU bonds, EU relative to EGBs, demand dynamics, ECB support, and what this means for LDI investors

Emerging Markets Outlook

Back in May 2020, on one side of the investor aisle BlackRock emerging market equity experts saw opportunities for positive returns, while debt colleagues held a grimmer outlook. As the third guarter comes to a close, read our updated outlook on what we think is to come for emerging markets.

BlackRock Future

The global pandemic has many of us wondering what comes next - for the economy, healthcare, tech and for investing. Does globalism have a future? Will sustainable investing endure? Discover what was shared on these topics during the BlackRock Future Forum.

Lessons from COVID-19

Short-term funding markets are critical for financing governments, banks, and nonfinancial companies. We recommend that policy makers look holistically at short-term money markets to identify areas for improvement, including the commercial paper market structure, banks as intermediaries, and money market funds.

Risks

Capital at risk. The value of investments and the income from them can fall as well as rise and are not guaranteed. Investors may not get back the amount originally invested.

Past performance is not a reliable indicator of current or future results and should not be the sole factor of consideration when selecting a product or strategy.

Changes in the rates of exchange between currencies may cause the value of investments to diminish or increase. Fluctuation may be particularly marked in the case of a higher volatility fund and the value of an investment may fall suddenly and substantially. Levels and basis of taxation may change from time to time.

The information provided here is neither tax nor legal advice. Investors should speak to their tax professional for specific information regarding their tax situation. Investment involves risk including possible loss of principal. International investing involves risks, including risks related to foreign currency, limited liquidity, less government regulation, and the possibility of substantial volatility due to adverse political, economic or other developments. These risks are often heightened for investments in emerging/developing markets or smaller capital markets.
