How did the Fund perform last year?

- For the reporting period ended December 31, 2024, the Fund’s Class K Shares returned 24.94%.
- For the same period, the S&P 500 Index returned 25.02%.

In 2024, United States (“U.S.”) equity markets experienced significant growth, driven by investor optimism in artificial intelligence (“AI”)-related companies and strong earnings reports. The Federal Reserve (“Fed”) maintained interest rates at first as inflation rose in February 2024 and labor market data remained strong, dampening expectations of rate cuts at the beginning of the year.

Large-cap equities continued to perform well into the second quarter 2024. The consumer price index (“CPI”) increased by 0.3% in April but remained flat from April to May, while the unemployment rate rose slightly from 3.9% to 4.0%. The Fed kept rates unchanged, leading to a rally in large-cap stocks, though small-cap equities lagged due to reduced rate cut expectations in the second quarter.

The third quarter of 2024 saw a mixture of optimism and caution. A weaker CPI in July extended the bull market, but a disappointing jobs report in August raised concerns about an economic slowdown. Market volatility increased due to geopolitical risks and U.S. Presidential Election developments. The Fed cut rates by 50 basis points in September 2024, boosting equity markets to new highs.

In the fourth quarter of 2024, U.S. equities remained positive despite sell-offs in October and December. A strong November rally followed Donald Trump’s reelection, benefiting sectors aligned with his economic agenda. The Fed cut rates by 50 basis points across November and December, while still aiming to achieve its goal of reducing inflation to its 2% target. The Federal Open Market Committee revised its 2025 rate cut projections from four to two, causing a December selloff as investors adjusted to expectations of persistent inflation. Labor market conditions eased, with unemployment at 4.2% in November 2024.
